EDITORIAL

Hello!

Happy Women's Day

she is a daughter, sister and mother

then why always she suffer..?

why we differentiate between he and she god didn't then why do we..?

this is dissapointing everyone not only to me....

to girls we have to give support

give education to them as it works as passport...

now-a-days girls are competeting in every field,,,

in army, in airlines and in court...

after getting education named wings,

their flight will land to a bright future.

she may become a doctor, scientist or a teacher....

'he' and 'she' they both have quality,

they both have ability

so we shuld prefer gender equity and equality....!

(shraddha shraddha)

Why do we celebrate woman's Day? Is it that women's are special or whether we want say for a day that they are above man? Such question haunts my mind when we celebrate such days. Why can't we take women same as men. Why do we treat them as Goddess or at times those they cannot shell themselves? The time has come when women's should say that we are no special creatures on the earth; give us the same stature as of men. Neither is we God with extreme power nor very weak that can't even protect themselves.

The irony of today's celebration!

To move on to this issue of our own e-zine having contribution from 7 nations and 25 contibutions in all. This issue highlights the research skills of undergraduate students. The research on habits such as their savings, use of mobile phones etc. of youth was carried out.

Equally loaded is our poem section and short fiction will definitely entertain you in your free times. Photo feature will attract the readers depicting the beauty of kerala.

I express my gratitude to our management and patron, also obliged to our review team for their continuous support. We would be happy to receive suggestions from you for making E-Zine better every time.

At the end I take this opportunity to wish everyone here a very Happy Holi. Let everyone's life filled with colours of joy and happiness.

Happy Reading!

Ms. Neetu Kapoor

Chief Editor