

What I Search for?

By K. V. Dominic

I search for a home where father, mother and children live in perfect harmony

I search for a society where there is no discrimination on gender, class and religion

I search for an ism which truly stands for the welfare of the majority

I search for a just ruler who can punish all criminals and save the innocents

I search for a selfless leader who fights against corruption and saves nation from the monster

I search for a religion which never flatters God but protects human beings and other beings

I search for a school which imparts to our pupils secularist and eternal values

I search for a kitchen which cooks and serves food for the starving mouths

I search for a house which serves as a shelter for the millions of homeless

I search for a Buddha who loves all creations and bans killings of animals

Alas, knowing my vain search

I search for a face towel to wipe out tears of the wretched

Bio:

Prof. Dr. K. V. Dominic, English poet, critic, short story writer and editor has authored twenty two books. He is the Secretary of Guild of Indian English Writers, Editors & Critics (GIEWEC), Editor-in-Chief of international biannual refereed journal Writers Editors Critics (WEC), Publisher and Editor of the refereed biannual International Journal on Multicultural Literature (IJML) and also the Publisher of the annual New Fiction Journal (NFJ). He is also a SAARC writer. He can be contacted at: Email: prof.kvdominic.com. Web Site: www.profkvdominic.com